Andrew Willett CEO

'Who would have thought that being as injury prone as I have been throughout my rugby career, could ever have been of any use to anyone?'

Australian born, Andrew played rugby for New South Wales, the Australian Sevens and Barbarians teams. Andrew simultaneously worked as a financial markets trader for 8 years where he was Treasury Manager, Foreign Exchange and Media Representative. He left Sydney in October 2001 to pursue a scholarship at Oxford University, studying on the MBA programme. It was during his time at Oxford that Andrew first came up with the concept of Pure Sports Medicine; His experience of intense medical treatment over many years in his quest to play to his full potential, gave him invaluable insight into how both an athlete, and a patient feels when they are injured or performing below their own standards.

Andrew highly values the rewards of the team environment, not only those that play by your side, but all those that support you along the way; administrators, coaches, friends, fans, and medical staff. He believes the best teams have these qualities, in sport and in life, and these are the qualities that we are constantly striving to demonstrate at Pure.
